

don't understand this! We moved inside when ~~the~~ it became clear that ~~the~~ food was going to take ages. When we finally left (without having made a name for ourselves, for a change) Tim or Ian jumped off ahead again in an attempt to reach the 3rd pub on our itinerary before it closed. They were apparently stumped down by ~~the~~ noticing that the outside stonery of a bridge en route looked like stepping stones or crossing that way... until they noticed the gaps in the track & the wobbiness of the stones that ^{had} survived. When they got home the owner was just shutting up shop, still, as they pointed out he had been there yesterday. The second party went slower & took time to note the passage scene (including a stone hut circle, which we also couldn't find), play on dagger bridges etc. Left Angela & Arwen (Dominic & Sarah) to find the house of Gordes (go & investigate the Postbridge Tourist Info) with the rest of us ~~at~~ (the 4 Ms & Becca) going back up the path complaining about the frequency of traffic, & speculating that the locals were planning a medieval-esque means of revenge for our fireworks last night (we were now notorious - D+S mentioned in the postshop in Postbridge that "we're renting the 'H'" to which came the reply "O You're the ones with the fireworks").

I have been ordered to put in the quote (from all of us except T & Ian) over the stone circle "we were looking for Stonehenge!"

EPIC COMPLETE (much commented on length-wise)
